ANTITANK TRAINING, SHEN-YANG MILITARY REGION, CHINA, APRIL-JULY 1974

1. Antitank training was observed at 12 military installations in the Shen-yang Military Region on photography [REDACTED]

25X1

[REDACTED] Most of the training involved the use of earthen dummy tanks, which have been noted previously in China. In six cases, however, tanks, mockup tanks, and derelict tanks were being employed for training purposes, indicating that the Chinese are placing more emphasis on realistic antitank training for troops in the Shen-yang Military Region. In addition, two of the installations exhibited especially sophisticated facilities for such training.

2. One of these installations is the Chi-chi-ha-erh Headquarters Infantry Division Army Barracks AL 1, where an antitank training area including various types of tank traps, obstacles, and antitank training devices has been constructed (Figure 2). The devices include a probable type-59 tank sitting on rails apparently for staging a controlled drive-over of troops in trenches.

3. Another installation with comparatively sophisticated tank training facilities is Chin-hsi Army Barracks Northeast AL 1, where a small area designed for antitank training has also been constructed (Figure 3). This training area contains three probable derelict tanks and a small mockup tank propelled along a track by a winch system.
